RESEARCH WILL CHANGE THE FUTURE

Help BEAT Heart Disease is part of Research for the Future, an NHS supported campaign that helps people find out about and take part in health and care research. Taking part in research helps to discover new ways to prevent, diagnose and manage heart disease.

If you have had a heart attack or live with a heart condition such as heart failure, angina, or atrial fibrillation, register now with Research for the Future to receive information about research opportunities. The process is easy. We will ask you for your contact details as well as some questions about your general health and heart condition. Everyone over the age of 18 is welcome to register.

There are many different types of research you can take part in, including completing a survey, joining discussion groups, or being involved in clinical trials to find new treatments. It is always your decision whether to take part in any research we tell you about. If at any time you change your mind and no longer want to receive information, let us know.

The information you provide is stored on a secure NHS database. It will never be shared with anyone else. To find out more about how we protect your personal information, see our privacy notice:
